Chilling winds batter Jonathan Cornett's single-wide trailer in Morgantown. While most are bothered by this bitter cold, Jonathan enjoys it; his love of seeing the snow shimmering with the sun and his ability to wear his favorite thick clothes, something that hasn't gotten old even after 20 years of living. He gets ready for the day, as he needs to prepare for the grueling work found in the Game Design & Interactive Media major at WVU. He'll be handling both the programming and the sound; having done so many solo projects that they're almost second nature to him. He'll need to work hard to make up for his tendency to procrastinate and/or forget tasks, to ensure he doesn't fall behind. Once he's done with his work, he'll go home and 'chill' with video games, with the only thing hindering him there being his own hard-working mentality, which carries over to his hobby of video gaming and results in him never quitting even when he should. The only thing that rivals his determination in any front is his lack of money sense; he has spent around a thousand dollars on video games alone despite only getting a debit card 3 years ago, as video games are his passion in life, and he forgets that cash isn't infinite. From all of this, he'd seem to be an eccentric, and he is, but despite this he proves to be an effective leader, having led a 5 person team despite also being the team's only programmer. Tech is part of his job and his dream career, and he loves to observe and surround himself in interesting electronics; despite this however, he has a burning hatred for Generative AI, both due to the ethical issues with it and a negative personal experience involving it, and actively avoids anything that uses it.

Once he no longer needs to focus on school for a time, he gets together with his friends to play board and video games together as well as goof off, a time he relishes as he cannot meet with them often due to differing life paths. When he isn't doing so, he's at home, with his two cats; he adores cute things after all, including things not typically seen as cute such as moths and crows. When he is not doing any chores, he'll likely start playing video games, reading stories, or watching videos on YouTube. The types of games he plays are numerous, but he has a soft spot for games involving exploration and/or difficulty due to them melding well with his determination, and tends to avoid games that require multiple players, as his friends are often too busy to really play them and he is generally afraid of strangers. Despite his love of leisure, he doesn't watch TV, mainly because his TV isn't even connected to his trailer's cable, and he couldn't be bothered to hook it up. When he boots up his laptop, he promptly realizes he forgot to cancel a couple of his subscriptions for products he wasn't using, and has to wait until the next billing date so he doesn't lose out on his money, and he considers cancelling his OneDrive subscription before he remembers that, due to some earlier classwork in Beginning Game Design, his storage space is in the deep negatives without it. Later, he'll be going out, and trying new food and drinks, something he loves to do and is willing to pay a premium for, even when he ends up hating half of what he tries due to how picky he is. He, as a bit of a philanthropist, will likely help others while he's out, and his love of the environment will keep him quite occupied as he's walking. Despite this, however, he dislikes travel, and prefers to stay in his home state, since she ends up suffering severe cases of homesickness. While he won't say it out loud due to the negative connotations of the word, he's a self-proclaimed hedonist who believes that the main purpose of life is to enjoy it. When he thinks of himself, he sees a hard-working eccentric who'll come up with the most absurd ideas and then pull them off. Once he's out of college, he will pursue his current goal for his future career; to create his own video games for others to enjoy and to make his mark on the world.
